Chinese Zodiac Animals Compatibility

Each of the animal signs has its own strengths and weaknesses. Some are gregarious and passionate, while others are peaceful and reserved; some are easily angered and others quietly perseverant.

The compatibility readings essentially refer to a romantic partnership, but much of the advices given can also be applied to relationships between friends or colleagues. Interpret the readings according to your situation – and you may well be surprised at just how accurate they are!

Rat & Rat

You are as intense and passionate as one another, and when you first meet it may seem that the outside world hardly exists as you are so caught up in the pleasure of each other's company. You share a sense of fun and humour, and you are both private and secretive, as well as determined and suspicious. But eventually the highs of this relationship may wear thin simply because you are so similar. If resentment begins to creep in with one partner it will probably also arise in the other, and you will slowly pick at each other's faults. If, however, you realize what is happening and approach this care, a sense of security can be restored.

Rat & Ox

The Ox and the Rat appreciate each other's need for independence and privacy, and while the Ox is organizing daily affairs, the Rat may be devising new schemes or looking for challenging opportunities. Although the Rat is astute, the Ox can also offer sensible advice and together they make a determined partnership. There is a natural mutual respect, and when the situation demands, they can both be serious, perseverant workers. There is, however, a side to the Rat that is more passionate and gregarious and less controlled than the discreet Ox; the Rat's sudden lively reactions can sometimes catch the Ox unawares, although these unexpected moments usually come as a welcome surprise.

Rat & Tiger

These two signs share a need for stimulation and change, although the Rat is not prepared to go as far or as fast as the Tiger. The Rat enjoys a new challenge and, like the Tiger, is often bored by mundane, day-to-day matters. Sometimes, however, the Tiger can be too adventurous, which makes the Rat feel nervous or isolated. The tiger enjoys romance and flirtation, and in an established relationship the Tiger sees this as just having a bit of fun, but it can be rather irritating for the Rat. There may also be clashes over the Rat's need to feel secure and provided for, in contrast to the Tiger's more carefree approach. However, the two signs will be able to find a balance as long as the Tiger understands the Rat's hopes and fears and tries to make plan and share his or her ideas.

Rat & Rabbit

The Rat's drive and energy may be unnerving for the more peaceful rabbit, and if the rabbit cannot keep up with the pace it might not be long before the Rat turns his or her sharp criticism on the hapless rabbit. The Rabbit will be able to adapt to a certain extent, but can only deal with a limited amount of unpredictability and mood change. The Rat likes a challenge and can be full of passion and determination but the Rabbit may withdraw, unsure of what is going on. The Rabbit is the more careful and less competitive of the two signs, although both do share a need for security and comfort in a relationship, and this could be the common ground that allows the relationship to work.

Rat & Dragon

The Dragon knows how to charm and captivate the Rat, and together they form a lively and adventurous couple. The dragon likes to be the center of attention, winning over an audience and attracting a band of admirers. But the Rat is not left in the shadows – he or she can share in the dragon's plan or games, offering subtle and spotting good opportunities. Both signs are gregarious and confident, and are likely to prevent one another from pursuing their own particular interests. If the Rat needs privacy or space the busy Dragon will not object, and when the Dragon needs admiration the Rat will not be short of complements.

Rat & Snake

You are both astute observers of the world around you, and when a good opportunity appears you both know to take advantage of it. There is a certain understanding between you, and sometimes you can read each other's thoughts without a word being spoken. If anything, the Rat has more drive than the Snake, and when the Snake wants to sit back for a well-deserved break and the Rat may still be negotiating or planning. You can both be lively company, and share a subtle and sharp sense of humour. The Rat and the Snake are both passionate signs, and although the Snake wants fidelity and commitment as much as the Rat, this might be harder for the Snake to put into practice. The Rat may need to give the Snake a little more time to commit, and in return the Snake will have to learn to be more attentive to this partnership.

Rat & Horse

The emotions of the Rat and the Horse likely to run high, and this could initially prove to be a very passionate relationship. For a while the world may pass you by because you are so wrapped up in each other, but before long the Rat may pull back. The Horse feels the highs and lows of romance very deeply, and result the realities of work and responsibility take second place. In contrast, the Rat keeps a keen eye on what is happening beyond the relationship and will not lose control. The horse's total involvement could irritate the Rat, whose sharp criticisms may leave the Horse feeling hurt and unfairly treated. For this romance to flourish, the Rat has to hold back criticism while the Horse calms down to focus on the practicalities of life.

Rat & Goat

The Goat finds it hard to keep up with the Rat's energy and drive, and would rather be left to take things in his or her own time. You are both romantics and have determined streak, but this is expressed in different ways. The Rat is good at spotting opportunities and carrying plans through efficiently, while the Goat likes to mull over life, taking time out to dream or to create. The Rat wants to get going, see a project completed and then be recognized for the skills and effort that he or she has put in. The Goat cannot be pushed in this way, and may well be too preoccupied even to notice the Rat's achievements. In order for this partnership to survive and thrive, the Goat will have to be more focused and attentive and the Rat more tolerant.

Rat & Monkey

These two signs can find great excitement and energy in each other, but they are both strong characters and there is an element of competition to contend with. The Rat is always at the losing hand when in battle of these two animals. If this is kept in check they can be great company, but it is not unusual for the Monkey ultimately to gain the upper hand. In early stages of a relationship the Monkey may be swept along, but the Rat's intensity and passion can be alluring, but he or she is also skilful and could easily emotionally out-manoeuvre the Rat, so the two signs need to establish a balance whereby the Rat allows the Monkey some space and the Monkey, in return, is more emotionally straightforward.

Rat & Rooster

The Rat is a good observer and rarely acts on impulse, preferring to analyse situations before making a commitment. The rooster likes to be seen and heard, whereas the resourceful Rat chooses his or her words more skillfully. Initially, the Rat may only see a superficial side to the rooster's nature and will soon become irritated and critical of his or her shallowness, but the Rooster is also courageous and thoughtful. Time and patience is needed to overcome first impressions so that the Rat can discover and appreciate the Rooster's honesty and openness. Once the Rat really understands the Rooster, he or she will find that they both share a strong critical capacity, and will value the Rooster's sharp skills of judgment.

Rat & Dog

The Rat and the Dog share a need for privacy; the Rat guards his or her independence, while the Dog shies away from noise and aggression. In company, the Rat is more confident and socially adept, and will give the Dog the confidence that he or she may lack in public. The dog is often anxious, wondering what problems or pitfalls lie ahead, but the Rat keeps a wary eye on the world. These two signs can form a close and trusting bond: the Dog appreciates the Rat's intelligence and energy but also understands the Rat's watchfulness, and in return, the Rat appreciates the Dog's sincerity, honesty and fidelity. In times of trouble, the supportive and trustworthy Dog will be at the Rat's side, fearlessly offering his or her support.

Rat & Pig

You are both capable of a loving, deep relationship, although the Rat's passion may be a bit startling for the Pig. The Rat can be joyful and intense, meaningful and moody, and the peaceful Pig can usually handle the whole range. The Pig may, however, be upset if the Rat is too aggressive or demanding, but the Pig usually finds a cheerful way to resolve the tension. The Pig share the Rat's sense of fun, and together you both like to indulge in life's luxuries. You are likely to spend many happy and exciting days in each other's company, and although the Rat may become frustrated by the pig's innocence, the affection and the care that the Pig offers more than compensate for this.

Ox & Ox

You are both good organizers and efficient workers, and it is rare for you to make a hasty judgment. You are not afraid of challenges or variety but you choose security over risk and resent being forced to make rash decisions. Neither of you thrives on turbulent emotional scenes, preferring instead to conduct your relationship at a steady and reliable pace. You know how to find a balance between professional and personal commitments but, if anything, the pattern of your life may be a little too predictable, and from time to time one of you will be tempted to throw caution to the wind and experiment with the unusual.

Ox & Tiger

The Ox has to keep a close eye on the Tiger in order for this relationship to flourish. The Tiger is able to provide a certain security, which the Ox likes, and at the same time adds an air of excitement, which is appreciated as long as it is not pushed too far. In return the Ox is reliable and loving, but should not become too dependent since the Tiger also needs his or her freedom. The Tiger may get itchy feet and feel the need to flirt and have some fun, and to some extent the Ox will try to ignore what is happening. However, the Ox does not have limitless amounts of patience; the Tiger has to know when to hold back and behave so that the Ox can be reassured that all is well.

Ox & Rabbit

You both appreciate the comforts of home and the stability of familiar environments. Neither of you wants to take unnecessary risks or be involved in emotional confrontations; what you need is security, tenderness and dependability. The Rabbit is the more hesitant and nervous of the two signs, and if one of you has to defend your relationship then it is the Ox who will rise to the challenge. The Rabbit is more apprehensive of the unknown or unpredictable, but the Ox is well-grounded and solid, armed with common sense and determination when faced by a crisis. And if the Ox stubbornly refuses to move from his or her standpoint, the intelligent Rabbit will put the Ox at ease and persuade him or her to compromise.

Ox & Dragon

The Ox's patience and orderly life will definitely be challenged by the vivacious dragon. The Ox likes to tread cautiously, weighting advantages against disadvantages before making a commitment. The Dragon takes more risks, excited by the possibilities ahead but usually intelligent enough to identify the pitfalls. The Ox admires the Dragon's energy and charisma, while the Dragon appreciates the Ox's dependability. The Ox can provide a stable backdrop to the Dragon's adventures, but the Dragon must be careful not to take advantage of the Ox's support. If the Dragon becomes too elusive, the strong-willed Ox will be quick to object, so the Dragon needs to be opened to the concerns of the more conservative Ox.

Ox & Snake

The Ox is attracted by the Snake's charm and attentiveness, and will happily care and cater for the beguiling Snake. The Ox is likely to take care of the domestic organization and finances while the Snake ventures forth to pursue new ideas and astutely handle negotiations or deals, returning to the Ox now and again for sound advice. When the situation demands, the wise Snake rises to a challenge with energy and intelligence against the Ox. The Ox is trustworthy and patient, and the Snake should be careful not to betray this trust, since the foundations are here for a strong partnership.

Ox & Horse

It is not always easy for the Ox to adapt to the Horse's energy and flights of fancy; the Horse may head off in direct pursuit of an interesting idea while the Ox is still considering the best course of action. The Horse's restless nature will eventually irritate the Ox who needs time to sit, reflect and plan. But if the Ox is willing to compromise and accept the Horse's unusual and daring adventures. The Ox offers patient and loving support, but the Horse cannot expect the Ox to make exuberant romantic declarations, and should not be too disappointed when he or she is told to act sensibly.

Ox & Goat

In this partnership, the sensible and reliable Ox offers the Goat stability, and in return the Goat is often full of ideas and imaginings which charm the Ox. It is likely that the Ox will take the responsibility for the day-to-day practicalities and decision-making, which certainly takes a weight off the Goat's shoulders. If anything, the Ox might be just a little too set in his or her ways, and this could somewhat dampen the Goat's fanciful ideas. However, the Goat usually has good intentions and certainly does not want to cause any trouble or harm, and this is appreciated by the Ox.

Ox & Monkey

The vivacity of the Monkey contrasts to the constancy of the Ox. The Monkey may be out and about charming others and colluding in a variety of schemes and projects, while the Ox watches with interest but will not try to match the Monkey. At the end of the day, the Ox provides a stable and firm home base. There is something in the Ox is not viewed as competition since he or she does not play the Monkey's game. A level of trust can develop between you both, and as long as the Ox is not hurt or deceived, a trusting and balanced relationship can be formed.

Ox & Rooster

There is plenty of potential here for a happy and long-lasting relationship. Privacy and freedom are important to you both and you also respect each other's talents. The Rooster brings fun into the Ox's life, introducing new ideas and encouraging the Ox to experiment with new colours and designs. The cautious Ox enjoys this new dimension, and in return offers reliability and security. The Ox may quash some of the Rooster's wilder ideas, considering them too frivolous, but will offer support and guidance for the more realistic ones. The Ox is steady and dependable, and it is this emotional support which appeals to the vulnerable and sensitive streak that the Rooster keeps hidden.

Ox & Dog

The Ox and the Dog share a bond of loyalty, reassured by the fact that they are there for each other at the end of a long way. When trouble appear on the horizon the soon becomes anxious, worrying over possible dangers and repercussions, but the Ox steadily confronts the problem. Instead of fretting about what is yet to happen, the Ox deals sensibly with immediate issues while keeping a watchful eye on the future. The Ox is a calming influence on the Dog when he or she panics, but also appreciates the Dog's faithfulness, thoughtfulness and depth of character.

Ox & Pig

Although the pig likes – and needs – a good social life, he or she is equally content sharing cosy evening with the Ox. The Pig likes the home based and stable Ox, although will undoubtedly feel restless and convince the Ox that a party or a weekend away is just what you both need. Meanwhile, the Ox is charmed by the Pig's honesty and playful company, and will probably acquiesce to the Pig's wishes. From time to time, the Ox will be cross when the Pig behaves recklessly, perhaps keeping both of you out too late or spending lavish amounts on a luxury item. But in the end neither of you wants to upset the other, and it is unlikely that any long-term resentment will be harboured.

Tiger & Tiger

When two tigers are paired together there will be no shortage of adventure or excitement – if anything, it may works against them. Both have independent and determined nature, both are motivated and active, and it is unlikely that one will want to follow the other's footsteps. If you are both prepared to allow each other the freedom to pursue personal interests without reporting back to one another, this relationship could work well. You would also have to allow for the fact that domestic life might be too busy with other interests to notice!

Tiger & Rabbit

The Tiger is more adventurous than the Rabbit, although both share an independent sprit. The Tiger's wanderings are likely to be far more lively than those of the Rabbit, who prefers time alone to think or to be creative, but ultimately you both want secure home base. As long as there is versatility and freedom in the relationship you appreciate the times you are together, but neither of you likes to feel trapped. Of the two, it is the Tiger who may become restless and wander off in search of new excitement, while the Rabbit remains attached to familiar surroundings, so it is important for the Tiger to find time at home to share quieter and more intimate moments with the Rabbit.

Tiger & Dragon

This is a combination full of enthusiasm and possibilities. Both characters are spirited and adventurous, although the Dragon may give more forethought to a new proposal than the Tiger. Both are sociable and open to suggestions and ideas, although if pushed too far it will be hard for the partnership to regain a sense of balance. Routine and predictability are not found in lively argument over some new project or scheme. You are both passionate in your outlook and approach, and your shared enjoyment of life is likely to overcome the disagreements that will inevitably occur.

Tiger & Snake

When the Tiger believes something is right or worth fighting for, he or she will immediately spring into action. This level of energy and enthusiasm seems unnecessary and often irritating to the snake, who likes to develop a strategy beforehand. While the Tiger will try to urge the Snake into action, the Snake usually prefers to stick to a familiar routine and pace. And though the Snake's interest can be aroused by new schemes, it is the way in which the two animal signs operate that may cause antagonism. Like the Tiger, the Snake is interested in ideas and is capable of identifying social or financial possibilities, but there needs to be compromise and negotiation over the approach.

Tiger & Horse

When there is a new place to discover or a party to attend, the Tiger and the Horse will be there. It takes little persuasion from either side to explore a new avenue or take a risk if there is something interesting to experience. This passion for life is one of the strengths in this relationship, and even though it can make life chaotic, it does not deter you. While the Tiger enjoys adventure for its own sake, the Horse is something to be gained personally, although he or she may not realize that this is the case. This should not have any kind of detrimental effect on the relationship, however, since the Horse believes that he or she is acting with the best of intentions.

Tiger & Goat

While the Tiger needs independence to pursue new interests, the Goat needs independence to contemplate or to dream but also requires the added dimension of security and reassurance. The Goat does not want to be left to fend off strangers, cope with confrontations or be asked to fight for a new cause, and the Tiger can provide the security and the care that the Goat needs without making unnecessary demands. The Tiger usually knows how far to intercede on the Goat's behalf without appearing over-protective. These two signs combine well as they have a mutual respect, but it is important that neither feels trapped in the relationship.

Tiger & Monkey

The adventurous and the astute are combined in this match. You are happy to explore together and experience new situations, but the Monkey usually has the upper hand. The Tiger may be excitable but is more straightforward than the Monkey, so while the Monkey is devising schemes and looking at new angles the Tiger may be happily traveling along without examining the undercurrents. And while the Tiger may be stalled by an unexpected obstacle, the Monkey will most likely have already anticipated a way round it. These two animal signs can be more open and less critical while the Tiger needs to be more patient and tolerant.

Tiger & Rooster

The Tiger's attention will be caught by the Rooster's extrovert character, and for a while this is very appealing, but before long the Tiger is likely to criticize rather than flatter. The Rooster likes to take an active role in events whereas the Tiger will begin to question the Rooster's judgment. In return, the Rooster feels unfairly treated and misrepresented, but beneath the Rooster's frank exterior is a responsible and courageous character; it just takes time and understanding for the Tiger to appreciate this. In order to put the relationship on a firm footing, both of you must be more patient and truthful about your needs and feelings.

Tiger & Dog

The Dog has a more cautious nature than the Tiger and will fire a warning shot if he or she thinks the Tiger is going too far or taking unnecessary risks. In return, the Tiger appreciates the Dog's watchfulness and loyalty. Sometimes the Dog will remain in the background, admiring the Tiger's enthusiasm, but if a worthwhile cause presents itself the Dog will not hesitate to leap into action. These two animal signs combined create a formidable team when they are fighting on behalf of others. However, while you are both pursuing your individual interests, the Tiger should not forget that the Dog needs tenderness and reassurance if the relationship is to flourish.

Tiger & Pig

These two signs share many of life's interests and will encourage and defend one another. The bonds of friendship and attraction are likely to be strong; you both recognize the time for companionship and the time for freedom and independence, and will not make unreasonable demands on each other. Sometimes the Pig can be naive in his or her enthusiasms and the Tiger will arrive with a word of warning, which the Pig usually accepts. When the Tiger heads off in search of adventure the Pig will tolerantly watch the Tiger from a distance, but when complications arise the Pig knows how to rein the Tiger back in.

Rabbit & Rabbit

You can find peace, contentment and above all, harmony in this relationship. While others may enjoy quarrels or unpredictable romantic scenarios, you prefer comfort and reliability, secure in the fact that you have each other. The Rabbit needs a familiar environment and likes to be surrounded by beautiful objects and colours to create a world that is welcoming and reassuring. You both enjoy areas of natural beauty, and you also like to explore shops or galleries, buy unusual goods or entertain at home. But the safe world that you create is not prepared for turmoil, and if you are confronted by a crisis it might take all your resources of energy to deal with it and re-establish order once again, so try to keep a sensible eye on the world around you to prepare yourselves for unforeseen events.

Rabbit & Dragon

The Rabbit needs security and affection and will withdraw when this balance is threatened. On the other hand, the Dragon is an adventurer, driven by challenge and excitement. The Rabbit may feel that he or she is losing control, since it is hard to keep track of the Dragon and even harder to elicit the regular reassurances that the Rabbit needs. However, the Rabbit does admire the Dragon's confidence, and he or she is happy to retreat into the background when the Dragon takes the limelight. The Dragon can also not consistent enough for the cautions Rabbit, who may eventually be forced to confront the Dragon; when this happens, the Dragon should try to respond gently to the Rabbit's emotional needs.

Rabbit & Snake

You both relish the opportunity of escaping from the world to find a peaceful corner where you can relax and feel secure in each other's company. You share a love of nature, design and beautiful objects, and days often fly by when you are simply walking or exploring together. The Rabbit and the Snake need a comfortable base to return to after a day's work, but while you both appreciate privacy it is the Rabbit who is most hurt if his or her home invaded by strangers or boisterous company. The Snake takes more risks and needs challenges, and unlike the Rabbit, the Snake is not frightened by sudden change. The Rabbit should encourage the Snake to be more tolerant, and in return the Snake will open the Rabbit's eyes to a more exciting world.

Rabbit & Horse

The Horse and the Rabbit are capable of great love and tenderness. The Horse is passionate and excitable, often carried away by the joy of romance, and the quieter Rabbit welcomes these displays of affection and devotion. The Rabbit needs to be reassured that he or she is safe and loved, and the Horse is happy to offer this support. The Rabbit admires the Horse's energy and confidence, although the Horse's exuberant nature can make the Rabbit withdraw until things have calmed down. But there are also days when the Horse feels depressed or isolated, weighed down by the troubles of the world, and the Rabbit will be there to offer comfort and sensible advice in this mutually supportive relationship.

Rabbit & Goat

There are times when it seems you have both found a soul mate – and this could be one of them. Together you can go off on flights of fancy, traveling and sharing ideas and experiences. Once the Rabbit starts worrying, the Goat will calm him or her down, while the Rabbit demonstrates his or her appreciation by showing affection and tenderness. In turn, when the Goat becomes nervous or hesitant the Rabbit will try to offer security. When you both become anxious or unsure at the same time, however, there could be a problem, and this is the weakness in the partnership; you may both be unprepared for unexpected problems and do not have the resources to deal with them. When this happens you need to stay calm, assess the situation and then work out an effective strategy together.

Rabbit & Monkey

The Rabbit is the quieter and more reserved of the two, and although the Rabbit can be a dreamer, that does not mean he or she is unaware of the Monkey's comings and goings and usually knows what the Monkey has in mind, which – in a subtle way – pleases the Monkey. Occasionally the Rabbit needs to curtail the Monkey's behaviours in case one of them, or even someone else, gets emotional hurt. The Monkey trusts the Rabbit's observations and, with a little persuasion, will bow to the Rabbit's concerns. But essentially these two signs can grow together to develop an open, intimate and caring partnership.

Rabbit & Rooster

It is going to be hard to find an equilibrium in this match; at times the Rooster's energy and drive is too much for the placid Rabbit to handle. The Rooster's exuberance is in sharp contrast to the normally retiring Rabbit, and it will take some careful negotiation to prevent any resentment and recrimination creeping into the relationship. The Rabbit needs harmony and is thrown off balance in boisterous company or when confronted by unpredictable behaviour. Sometimes the Rooster cannot help performing in front of others, although this masks a more thoughtful and reflective nature. The Rooster needs to quieten down and trust the Rabbit, and in return the Rabbit will not be able to reach the more sensitive side of the Rooster's character.

Rabbit & Dog

The Rabbit and the Dog are both honourable, honest and reliable. They will not promise more than they can realistically deliver, and are unlikely to put their financial or emotional security at risk. They need reassurance and tenderness, and together they can defend themselves against any intrusions and upheavals. When the Dog is anxious the sensible Rabbit will offer comfort, and when the Rabbit is frightened the Dog will rise to his or her defense. The Dog is fiercely protective and can display great courage in the face of a challenge, and when the Dog is too outspoken or enraged the Rabbit will find subtle ways to restore the peace.

Rabbit & Pig

There is a peaceful quality to your relationship; it is unlikely that your neighbours would ever hear you arguing, and even more unlikely for you to have a row in the public. You have a natural harmony, despite the fact that the Pig may play a few pranks or behave outrageously to tease the Rabbit. You share a love of the arts and nature, and are happy to spend hours in conversation or wandering around your home, giving each other the space you both appreciate. You can pursue your hopes together, feeling secure in your partnership, and when the Pig innocently heads into dangerous waters the watchful Rabbit will usually come to the rescue with a sensible plan.

Dragon & Dragon

When two people of this sign meet, everyone else may be put in the shade by their vitality and charm. You both like to attract attention and be complimented, and it is not unusual for you to have a trail of admirers. Amid your busy schedules you find time to flatter each other before heading off to travel to new places or meet new people. You are rarely overcome by jealousy or a need to be reassured because you are confident of your attraction for one another. You are both full of enthusiasm and like to draw others into your world: if anything, you may miss the fact that you do not have someone to push or give advice to. However, this will not preoccupy you for long since there are so many possibilities for you to explore and share.

Dragon & Snake

You both have charm, energy and wisdom and are unlikely to feel intimidated or trapped by one another. The Dragon is innately confident and charismatic and enjoys being center stage, and the Snake is happy to let the Dragon have this moment of glory. The astute and beguiling snake understands the Dragon's hopes and fears, judging the appropriate time to congratulate or console. However, there is a possibility that the Snake may be too possessive, but both signs have an admiration and respect for each other, recognizing their shared courage and determination, and this should ensure that the Snake's possessiveness is not a threat to the relationship.

Dragon & Horse

You both have enthusiasm for life and revel in the many opportunities that come your way. You like to travel and explore, perform and be admired, and as long as you have shared interests your energy and excitement will carry you along. Your relationship may hit more turbulent waters when it comes to practicalities, since neither of you wants to deal with the more mundane aspects of life; cracks may also appear in your attitude towards each other, particularly if you begin to make emotional demands. The Dragon needs attention and a certain level of devotion, which can make the Horse feel trapped. The Horse also needs recognition and independence, so you have to be truthful with each other and learn to offer mutual support and admiration.

Dragon & Goat

The Dragon is able to draw the Goat into an exciting and adventurous romance, but while the Goat is stimulated by new possibilities it may all happen rather too fast. The Goat is more dreamy and whimsical than the Dragon, taking time to make a decision and then wandering off to examine something else. The goat does not work at the same pace as the Dragon or need the same level of excitement, and while the Goat admires the Dragon's vivacity and the skills he or she may forget to compliment or congratulate the Dragon. In this romance, however, the Dragon may find a partner to encourage and cajole, someone who will listen to his or her dreams and schemes, although there is no guarantee that the Goat will actually be paying attention!

Dragon & Monkey

These two are capable of great things and could leave other romances far behind. The Dragon is bright, powerful and attractive, but the Monkey is not daunted by this because he or she knows how to charm and entice. They usually spark off ideas and plans in one another, which makes for a rather imaginative and creative combination. The Dragon needs to be admired more than the Monkey, and likes to be recognized and praised, and the wily Monkey knows just how to do this. The Monkey may be charmed, but he or she is not blinded by the passion or easily fooled. These two signs know exactly how to captivate each other, and together they can make a winning pair.

Dragon & Rooster

The dragon is attracted by the Rooster's vivacity and you both share a love of life; together you can inject fun into the duller situations. The Dragon's natural flair and charm attracts the Rooster, just as the Dragon is drawn by the Rooster's flamboyance. But you both have a more serious side, and are ready to react when your help or advice is needed. You are also responsible in times of trouble. While the Dragon has innate confidence and charm, and rarely needs guidance or protection, the Rooster needs to share his or her worries and insecurities with a close partner. The weakness of the partnership lies in the fact that the Dragon may not always be able to appreciate the Rooster's more vulnerable side, but if you are honest with one another the Dragon will understand and offer support in troubled times.

Dragon & Dog

The Dragon's presence could be overwhelming for the watchful Dog who will not be easily convinced by the Dragon's plan or won over by the Dragon's charms. The Dragon is full of energy and ideas, and is not fazed by loud company or unpredictable events. All of this may well make the Dog anxious, but it will also annoy the Dog and could be a source of argument. The Dog wants to know where he or she stands but the Dragon does not tend to focus on such details. The Dog is a faithful, trustworthy partner who enjoys romance but needs security, and the adventurous Dragon finds it hard to channel this kind of attention to one person. For this relationship to work, the Dog needs to be more adaptable to the Dragon's lifestyle and in return the Dragon should offer the Dog gentle reassurance.

Dragon & Pig

The Bright and gregarious Dragon is likely to sweep the Pig away in a flurry of romance. The Pig loves social outing and can be entertaining company, but the Dragon is usually the center of attention. If a crowd has gathered at a party it is often the Dragon to whom they are drawn, but the Pig will not feel abandoned. On the contrary, The Pig admires the Dragon's flair and they will happily share adventures and exploits together. The Pig knows how to congratulate the Dragon, to make him or her feel wanted, and the Dragon responds charmingly to the Pig's attentions. In return, the Dragon does not object to the Pig's wanderings or imaginings and is happy to support and encourage the affectionate Pig.

Snake & Snake

You admire each other's talents, charm and intelligence, and are happy devising schemes, planning manoeuvres or just relaxing in one another's company. You love discussing and debate, but can also recognize the absurd and share a subtle sense of humour. You can deal with challenges astutely and with determination and will not abandon your goals, but you also sense when the time is right to withdraw. All in all, this relationship has many strong points but there is also one drawback – you understanding each other too well and the thrill of romance might fade. You both have beguiling and determined natures so be careful you do not stifle or oppress one another.

Snake & Horse

The Horse can easily fall for the Snake's charisma and intelligence, and will be excited by the Snake's intuitive ideas. The Horse needs freedom to roam and explore, and the Snake will not object as long as he or she is not regularly asked to accompany the Horse on these exploits. The Snake is a shrewd judge of situations and subtly control the Horse, while the Horse is still under the impression that he or she is in charge of the relationship. At times the Snake may begin to tire of the Horse's boundless enthusiasm and naivety, but when the Horse lands in trouble the Snake will always be there to offer wise advice. The Horse needs admiration and reassurance which the Snake will provide, but both of these signs need the space to pursue their varied interests.

Snake & Ram

Both of you enjoy life's pleasures and do not like being tied to routine. The Ram is dreamy than the Snake, although the Snake is more likely to join in the Ram's wanderings than complain. If circumstances do not suit the Snake he or she will find a subtle way of escaping, and the Ram may not even realize it. Having to work together to a strict timetable would put a strain on your relationship; the Snake can deal with responsibility and work to deadlines but does not relish it, while the Ram feels under pressure to perform. When you are exhausted neither of you has the energy to provide the comforts you both need, so gauge carefully the level of commitment involved before you accept demanding tasks that may have an effect on your relationship.

Snake & Monkey

These have the energy and imagination to deal with several things at once, as long as they are of interest. You both enjoy a challenge and can trigger off ideas in each other, and if needs be you can work well together. The Monkey is good at spotting opportunities and figuring a way through difficult situations, but the Snake will not be left behind – he or she will adapt to the situation, well aware of what is happening. The Snake is more profound than the Monkey, prone to examining feelings and actions in depth, and the Monkey may lack the patience for these serious discussions. The Monkey can be hard to pin down which can annoy the Snake, so at times the Monkey may need to be more straightforward to win the Snake's confidence.

Snake & Rooster

You share a love of colour and design, and are happy shopping with each other or deciding on the right clothes for every occasion. Together you make a very elegant, interesting and lively couple, but your attraction for each other runs deeper than appearances – there is a natural empathy. The Rooster may appear superficial but there is a depth of feeling and an intelligence which the wise Snake recognizes. The Snake is subtler in his or her thoughts and actions, and the Rooster usually has the good sense to accept the Snake's wise advice. This relationship has the potential to be open and trusting since neither of you is afraid to discuss feelings privately, or reveal emotions.

Snake & Dog

The affectionate Dog trusts and admires the Snake's judgment and intuition, and is happy to accept the Snake's perceptive advice. When the Dog is consumed by anxiety and insecurity, the Snake offers the tenderness and reassurance that the Dog needs to regain confidence. The Dog is rarely jealous of the Snake's drive or determination – in fact, the Snake will take risks or rise to challenges that would normally make the Dog wary or nervous. The Dog respects the Snake's intelligence and depth, and is a protective, faithful and loving partner in return. The Dog rarely curtails the Snake's independence but usually remains in the background, offering loyalty and support.

Snake & Pig

The Snake likes attention and can impress the Pig with amusing stories and displays of skill. Before long, the attentive Pig may be reveling in the Snake's exploits, and will offer the Snake affection and lively company. The Snake may be tempted to take advantage of the Pig's trust and commitment and wander off thinking the Pig will wait patiently. Indeed, the pig may well be there when the Snake returns, but only because the Pig has been busy pursuing his or her own interests. The pig may be fooled once or twice but will soon realize what is happening, and if he or she should show interest in someone else the Snake will be deeply jealous and hurt. These two signs can build a happy relationship, but each needs a little freedom now and again.

Horse & Horse

You shared energy and enthusiasm keeps this relationship moving at a fast and sometimes uncontrollable pace. You are both passionate in romance and in life, and when your attention is caught by a new interest you pursue it with vigour. The Horse needs freedom to move and explore, and loves discovering new pleasures. You are open and warm-hearted but do not want to face the reality of failure or disappointment, so when your interest wanes you head off in search of particularly when troubled by inner doubts, but when you both feeling low you become anxious and withdrawn; at such times use your resources of energy to work through the situation, or try something new to restore your confidence.

Horse & Ram

The Horse is energetic and excitable, always eager to know what is happening somewhere else – and with the energy to join in, too. The Ram will go along with the Horse, since these new places and faces can add an extra dimension to the Ram's imagination. If anything, the Horse may be too lively and self-centred, and although Rams do not demand continual attention they do need encouragement. If the Horse is constantly out and about, when will he or she have time to notice the Ram's hesitancy? More often than not, however, the lack of routine and the unpredictability of this romance serves both partners well.

Horse & Monkey

The Horse is gregarious and open, revealing his or her passions when others are more reticent. At one level, the Monkey enjoys the Horse's energy and commitment, but this could become too much for the careful Monkey. Whereas the Monkey plans and calculates, the Horse lets emotions flow – the happiness or sadness that he or she feels is not hidden away. And while the Monkey loves romance but is always aware of the pitfalls and possibilities, the Horse is more likely to be swept along by the joy of it all. The Monkey tends to view this inappropriate unless he or she is really committed to the relationship, but once the Monkey understands and appreciates the Horse's deeper emotional needs and the Horse, in return, begins to settle down a little, the two signs can build a steadier relationship.

Horse & Rooster

There could be too many superficial similarities here. You are both aware of your appearance and the impression you create, and needs to be recognized and reassured, but in the process you might lose the opportunity to unravel deeper feelings; the competition between you could distract from your underlying needs. The Horse is passionate and enthusiastic, often carried along by his or her emotions, but the Rooster is more critical, although does share some of the Horse's impulsive nature. The Rooster also has a more practical outlook, and is usually prepared for an emergency. To build this relationship give each other space to express yourselves, but also make time for quieter moments so you can develop mutual understanding and patience.

Horse & Dog

The excitable and sociable Horse might well find a protective partner in the gentle Dog. The Horse needs more freedom and excitement than the Dog, and while the Dog keeps to familiar ground the Horse pursues new ideas and discoveries. Sometimes the Dog will take a risk and accompany the Horse on his or her adventures, but more often than not the generous Dog is happy to let the Horse take the limelight if he or she is left in peace. Although the Horse is prone to sudden anxieties, the Dog is the more pessimistic of the two – but often the most practical as well. The Dog is a trustworthy and faithful partner to whom the Horse should not take advantage of the Dog's trust.

Horse & Pig

The Horse loves the thrill of romance and delights in displays of emotion, and will express his or her feelings quite honestly. The Pig is happy to reciprocate, and both know how to celebrate your good fortune. You both like to explore, travel and make good discoveries, but the Pig is willing to let the Horse charge ahead and be the focus of attention. The Horse can be selfish and forget the Pig waiting patiently in the background; sometimes the Pig does not mind being overshadowed – in fact, he or she welcomes the breathing space. The Pig needs independence and the Horse has to learn not to demand the kind of continual attention which will limit the Pig's freedom and ultimately create resentment.

Ram & Ram

You have a natural empathy for one another and understand that you need a spiritual dimension to your lives. Many happy days will be spent planning, shopping or traveling, but you do not necessarily demand each other's company. Also, you do not make each other feel hindered because you know that you are both dreamers and need space to pursue your thoughts. The pitfalls in this combination lie in life's practicalities, such as who organizes the house, pays the bills and fulfils family responsibilities. While those around you become increasingly impatient you wait, hoping that other partner will act; neither of you wants to be tied to mundane matters, but you accept certain responsibilities and keep a watchful eye out for possible pitfalls.

Ram & Monkey

The astute monkey knows how to enjoy life just as much as the Ram, and the two travel well together. If one wants to indulge in a little luxury then the other is unlikely to refuse, and if a new scheme appears then both may follow it with enthusiasm. The monkey is clever enough to see what the Ram likes and to notice his or her weaknesses or insecurities, and can be a supportive and constructive partner. But the Monkey also has an independent and determined streak and, despite an easygoing front, keeps a close eye on organization and career. The Monkey can be diplomatic or political when the need arises, while the Ram may well feel adrift in these situations, but if the two signs are good friends the Monkey will come to the Ram's rescue.

Ram & Rooster

From time to time the Ram is happy to be in the Rooster's limelight, but at heart the Ram is much more of a dreamer and idealist. You both enjoy lively company and investigating new interests but the Rooster needs action, is critical of appearances and not afraid to state his or her thoughts. The Ram is less forceful and opinionated, and while the Rooster is busy the Ram may wander off in pursuit of a new idea. While you share a need for independence, the Rooster needs reassurance whereas the Ram is more of a free spirit and may not be able to offer the reliability or security the Rooster ultimately needs. The Ram will have to focus on supporting the Rooster, while the Rooster will have to make some allowances for the Ram's dreams and ideas.

Ram & Dog

You both have the potential to be interested in the unusual but the Dog will only go so far before worry sets in, while the Ram will continue regardless as long as he or she is fascinated. Here lies the difference between you: the Dog tends to keep more of a hold on life to avoid becoming anxious and stressed, whereas the Ram is sometimes carried away by dreams. However, the Ram also has his or her own fears and insecurities, and if both of you find depressed at the same time you could find yourselves sinking lower and lower if you are not careful. Essentially, you can both be affectionate and caring, and if you add a touch of optimism this should help to carry you through any difficulties.

Ram & Pig

The Ram and the Pig give each other the space to explore their individual interests, and it is unlikely that one will feel trapped by the other. You both appreciate the arts, theatre, film and the finer things in life. If necessary, the Pig can offer sensible advice or check that events are not getting out of control without spoiling the fun in process. Usually the Pig is more in touch with practicalities of life, but he or she will avoid unnecessarily of life, but he or she will avoid unnecessarily limiting the Ram creative ideas. Both these animal signs share a sensitive nature and find it easy to relate to one another. In addition, the Pig can usually sense when the Ram is either justly upset or being unrealistic, and will find a way to calm these unsettled periods.

Monkey & Monkey

There is a meeting of clever minds here; both of you usually know what you want – and how to get it. Monkeys are astute and charming and know how to win others over, and when two Monkeys come together they happily captivate each other, fully aware of what they are doing. They play games and they plan, but they do not fool one another. They may tire of each other in favour of someone who is more pliable, but more often than not they thrive in a relationship. They are not prone to great public displays of emotion but they are strong partners who work well together, particularly when they focus on a shared project.

Monkey & Rooster

You share a love of the good life and can both be entertaining company, but the Rooster is straightforward whereas the Monkey is wily. The Monkey often has a hidden agenda which confuses the Rooster, who likes to know exactly what is going on and has very direct opinions. The Rooster believes in immediate action and is not afraid to speak honestly, but the discerning Monkey likes to assess and analyse so that difficulties can be overcome in a subtler manner. You both need independence and the best solution is to allow a certain freedom in the relationship and be tolerant with each other, since your contracting characteristics could complement each other well.

Monkey & Dog

There is a chance that the Monkey may prove to be too unpredictable for the sensible Dog. While the Monkey is ducking and diving, having fun and sorting out projects, the Dog may feel unfairly left behind. The Dog is more conventional, and although he or she is often aware of what is going on it may be hard to catch up. However, these two signs do share a realistic vision of what it comes to relationships. They are not likely to throw themselves wildly into passion – even when in love they maintain their critical faculties – but the Dog may resent or disapprove of the Monkey's adept way of handling relationships or escaping from delicate situations. The Dog will have to make allowances for the Monkey's wily nature, while the Monkey should be more open about his or her plans and schemes.

Monkey & Pig

The Pig is not easily fooled by the Monkey's charms – in fact, he or she finds them quite amusing without feeling the need to compete. Although the Pig has a native streak, he or she often spots the Monkey's tactics and will watch from a distance to see what happens. The Pig, however, will not be left in the dark and can also be subtly manipulative if called upon. By nature the Pig is more honest and down to earth, but also enjoys having fun and sharing the Monkey's gregarious lifestyle. The Pig will be a loyal partner, allowing the Monkey to have the freedom he or she needs yet remaining constant and providing good company and support.

Rooster & Rooster

Since you share so many of the same qualities, you are able to admire and annoy each other at the same time. You enjoy the luxuries of life, take care of your appearance and like to follow your own routine. If you think something should be said then you will not hesitate to say it, but your criticisms can be unintentionally hurtful. You are a lively match both for each other and in company, but when you feel the need to state your opinion it might be best to hold back until you calmed down, since you may regret words said in haste. You are courageous and will come to aid of those who need you, yet underneath this confident exterior you recognize in one another a more vulnerable and insecure nature and realize that you need to be supportive of each other.

Rooster & Dog

Both have a sensitive and thoughtful side to their nature, although on the surface the Rooster appears outspoken, resilient and independent. The Rooster is not afraid of direct action and will speak unashamedly when he or she feels the truth should be told. The Dog is more cautious and nervous, but when confronted by a crisis or faced with an injustice shows courage and strength. The Rooster likes to perform and be heard, and the Dog can be irritated by this unnecessary flamboyance; it is at times such as this, when you are both angered, that it is easy to hurt each other. But when the Rooster's sensitive and serious nature is revealed the Dog will be an understanding and protective partner.

Rooster & Pig

The Pig admires the Rooster's confidence and social skills but is also to detect the Rooster's more vulnerable side. The Rooster appears to be supremely confident, charming in company and straightforward in his or her opinions, and the Pig is happy to share in the fun and entertainment that the Rooster provides. Yet the Rooster has a deeper and more reflective side that the observant Pig can detect, and when they are alone the understanding Pig is content to listen to the Rooster's concerns. Although you both like a certain level of independence you can also need companionship, and together you enjoy the highs and lows of life, offering each other mutual support and friendship.

Dog & Dog

You recognize that you both need love, tenderness and security, and together you can enclose yourself in a safe world. Neither of you wants to be faced by romantic turmoil, unpredictable scenes or financial hardship, and you will work with dedication and energy to protect your relationship and your family. You understand that you can both be anxious and nervous over minor matters or about the future and may spend hours discussing your worries, but at least you respect each other's emotions and opinions. You are able to maintain a strong partnership, and when you are actually faced by a crisis or witness unfair circumstances you have the courage and commitment to rise to the challenge.

Dog & Pig

These two can learn from each other; the Pig can inject fun into the relationship whereas the Dog can offer loyalty and trust. The Dog can be suspicious and easily angered, but the Pig is sensitive to these moods and will offer tender reassurances. On the other hand, if the Pig lands in trouble the Dog is there to protect him or her and fight off the troublemakers. They have a good understanding of each other, and when the Pig feels the Dog is becoming too morose he or she will devise an imaginative scheme to cheer the Dog up. The Pig knows when someone is trying to take advantage of the Dog, but there are times when the Dog is needlessly anxious and the forthright Pig will soon sort out the problem.

Pig & Pig

This relationship will certainly have its tempestuous moments but it is also promises great things. You know and understand each other; you both like freedom but not all the time, and you love activity but also need peace. Fortunately, you know one another well enough to gauge these moods, but when you are both in a determined or excited frame of dwell on arguments for too long because there are so many things to do and to share. Perhaps you know each other too well, and although you are very honest and affectionate you do occasionally need to outwit each other to create a challenge as well as to add a note of fun in the partnership.
